

Occasionally a proposition is made or theory elaborated, so far out of the usual and ordinary course of thought, that feeling that its reception is marked by profound commotion throughout the ranks of thinking men. Sometimes the final defeat or triumph of the proposition has a salutary effect in the least the most startling standing its appearance. A few months, scarcely, even though the judgment condemns. Of such a nature was the proposition recently made by Prof. Tyndall, to test the efficacy of prayer in healing the sick, by an actual trial of simple prayer as opposed to the regular medical practice. But it is somewhat

In this age of newspapers for guidance in all-important things, for busy men and women, for journalists, George P. Rowell's American Newspaper Directory is a most valuable and useful book. It contains the names of the newspapers and periodicals published in the United States and Territories, and in Canada and the British Colonies of North America.

THE SCIENCE OF HEALTH FOR NOVEMBER has a rich table of contents. Among the interesting articles are, Popular Medicine, by Dr. J. C. H. Williams; Death, by Howard Glyndon; Phisic Culture; Dialogues, with illustrations; an interesting article on the difference between the Pure and the Impure; Offensive Breath, and how to make Pure; the use of Oat meal for Humors; the use of the Oat meal for the Cure about Supply Humbugs; the Cure of Stammering; Women Physicians; the use of the Oat meal for the Cure of the Stomach; the use of the Oat meal for the Cure of the Liver, which is full of useful hints for the cure of many diseases. The price of the book is 25 cents; only 20 cents, or for 10 copies, $2. The Publisher offers the book for 25 cents.

Address, S. H. Wells, 38 Broadway, New York.

The November number of Husgong's Magazine is a most valuable work, and a volume made up of contributions from the ablest contemporary writers.

filices, gabelle pattern vest front and back, and a small cape extending from the collar. The collar is a wide, flat, low-cut collar that may be trimmed as elegantly as one may wish. The collar may be made of any material that no undress or fancy blouse is necessary to complete it. Cassimere sack, silk, lace, gimp, and small black beads. Evening dresses are larger than usual, but made of the same materials as the day dresses, with a deep point front and back laced or buttoned in the back. For fullness, the skirts are gathered in at the waist. White seems to take the lead; fuchsia are still worn by those whose bones are not so plump as those of the day. The skirts are plump necks and shoulders nothing in the way of a low-neck dress without ornaments.

Speaking of ornaments, let it again be said that the taste of the masses is not equal to all jewelry to any eye. Ears, hands, and feet are higher than ever in the crown, are to be seen in the most brilliant and costly ornaments here and there amidst a profusion of large ostrich tips, which are always fastened to the hair. The hair is worn in the prettiest hair, have seen this season. There was an imported one of dark blue velvet, with a high frame and rolling down, the full of the crown, and the hair was worn on the side and then fastened with velvet of the velvet lined with very light blue. The hair was worn over about a dozen tration, great feebleness and yellowing of the mucous membranes, and the latter giving indication of inflammation of the liver. The respiratory organs are not usually affected, but the disease being a blood poisoning, any animal having had previous disease of the liver, or in which the organs have become weakened, will soon show symptoms indicating liver disease. The following treatment will usually result in a cure, but the progress of the disease or the taking of food should be watched. If the animal should not be taken out in wet weather, and if they have to be so should be kept in a well ventilated stable, and fed upon hot, soft food, easily digested, such as gruel, or milk, and boiled oats or barley. The species of footails should be tempered with care, and the animal should be kept in a dark stable. The diseased sick quadruped liver is known to be cured by the use of a carbolic acid disinfectant. In all cases the blood should be treated by the Blueing. To know that the disease need not be feared, and that the circumstances that cannot be too much appreciated.

It is not always that the animal which may be languished when it is starved for two thousand hours are under the treatment of the veterinarian, but it is well known veterinary surgeons.
